fitted.

A whole product, finally speaking the landing page's language.

A design system written as the source of truth, then propagated to the three screens that matter most: Browse, Job Details, Tracker. Everything sits on the warm, premium foundation you approved. Open them in any order — the system is the same underneath.

A few committed decisions worth flagging.

You'll feel these on every screen. If any one of them is wrong, the whole system pivots — better to push back now than after another round.

01

The match ring is the core primitive.

Five sizes (XS → XL), all use the same DM Serif Display number inside a hairline circle. Color tone tracks the score band — never red, never yellow. I treated this as fitted.'s most recognisable UI gesture, second only to the wordmark.

02

No AI illustrations. Monograms instead.

Every company without a real logo gets a serif monogram in a tinted tile (three rotating tints). This keeps the feed editorial and avoids the "AI startup with fake logos" feel. When you bring real logos in, monograms become the fallback.

03

Clay (terracotta) is the editorial accent.

Reserved for Pro signals, pull-quote marks, "offer" cards, and one moment per screen. Blue runs the CTAs and active states; clay does the editorial voice. They never compete.

04

Free is a complete product.

Match ring, breakdown bars, coach analysis, resume health — all on Free. Pro adds the editorial layer (Why-rejected, career path, salary drafts). Pro never locks what Free promised. Tabs like "Why rejected" just carry a small italic pro mark.

05

Coach voice is first-person mentor.

"Your resume hits about 70% of what I'm looking for." Not "your resume matches 70%." The system speaks as the hiring manager, not about them. This shifts the entire emotional register from dashboard to conversation.

06

Cards are held by contents and rule, not shadows.

Every card on dark is a 1px hairline at 10% taupe with 1.8% surface fill. No heavy elevations. The hierarchy comes from type scale and whitespace — never from drop-shadows, which would feel webby.

What I'd love your read on before round two.

Mobile depth

Each screen is responsive and adapts elegantly, but a phone-specific PWA pass (gesture nav, swipeable feed cards, install moments) deserves dedicated screens. Want that as round-two focus?

Job Details • other tabs

Match details is the default. Tailor Resume, Stand Out, Email Drafts, Interview Prep – these need their own panels. Same shell, different content. Worth a dedicated round?

Onboarding & Quiz

The first-time-user flow sets the emotional contract for the whole product. Want to design the quiz next? It's where the warmth needs to land hardest.

Pricing & Account

I sketched the Free vs Pro tile in the system. The full Pricing page and Account modal can either follow the marketing voice (paper room) or the app voice (charcoal) – your call.
